What is Europe's Resilience and Recovery Facility?

The European Resilience and Recovery Facility (RRF) is the centrepiece of Europe's recovery plan – it covers a five-year period from 2021-2026. It aims to help Europeans focus on a positive recovery following the aftermath and effects of the COVID-19 pandemic. The European resilience and recovery plan aims to make Europe's economies and societies more sustainable, resilient, and better prepared for the opportunities and challenges that underpin the digital transition and a green transitions. A total of more than 700 billion euros is being made available to Europe's Member States through a mix of grants and loans. Today's calculations show that digital health is benefitting from around a quarter (25%) of the investment of RRF funding allocated to health. So far, the health sector has been assigned about 32 billion euros (8% of the RRF total funding).

Each of the European Member States is responsible for its own resilience and recovery plan – with its distinct targets and milestones. Each country makes a regular country report on its progress made, for example, in May 2022. Member States are encouraged to focus on areas in six pillars. Two of these pillars are: digital transformation, and health, economic, social and institutional resilience. The regions in all the countries help to support the individual country's plans.
